

Shake is a very visual show that uses mainly marionettes (stringed) puppets to keep the young audience's attention for the forty minutes of the show.

Tutti-Fruity [the puppet that's good enough to eat] comes completely apart: first one arm, then the other, then legs and even his head decides to wander off and it's all done in time to toe-tapping music.

Much of the show is set to music as all manner of colourful marionettes come apart, change and do the unexpected and the seemingly impossible.

With healthy eating as the core message, Shake explores the food pyramid, the importance of exercise and a balanced diet whilst ensuring that the kids are thoroughly entertained and delighted from start to finish. The emphasis is on learning as fun.
